‘Stay the course’

The 2023 Wealth Magnets have already mapped out a safe way for clients to navigate an uncertain economy; they just need them to follow it

By Daniel Hood

In the face of volatile markets, rising inflation, the Federal Reserve ending a decades-long era of low interest rates, and a pervading sense of economic uncertainty, the Wealth Magnets of Accounting Today’s 2023 class of the Top 150 Firms by Assets Under Management — the most successful CPA financial planners in the country — have one primary message for clients: Stick to the plan.

“Economic uncertainty and a sustained inflationary environment continues to grab headlines and put the public in a frenzy. These headlines and the ‘noise’ associated can make clients uneasy and lead to them making an emotional decision that isn’t in their best interest,” said Ryan Frank, a director at SC&H Financial Advisors. “We advise clients to focus on what is in their control, as nobody can predict markets or when these headwinds are going to cease. Our job is to help clients stay on track and not make any reactionary actions that could jeopardize their well-being. We do this by creating a carefully curated financial plan that includes contingency plans for times just like these.”

Or, as Marcum Wealth CEO Eric Wulff put it, “Stay the course and stick to the financial plan, as it is the North Star that guides you in periods of uncertainty.”

The Wealth Magnets are keen on reminding clients that the plan was built to accommodate rough periods; they’re also quick to point out that those same plans have weathered previous rough spots. “For most of our clients, this is not the first challenging environment we have been through together,” said Deborah Maret, the chief compliance officer at RubinBrown Advisors. “We remind them that their long-term financial plan should drive any decisions versus shorter-term market and economic conditions. This helps clients focus on the long term.”

And Cheyenne Cannova, a client services manager at Joseph A. Cannova CPA CFP, echoed that emphasis on the long term: “We have to let them know it’s not a sprint but a marathon — have a plan and stick to it unless there are changes in your situation.”

With so much negative news flooding the airwaves and the internet, it’s critical to make sure clients are seeing through to the underlying reality. “It is important to remember that you cannot invest based on how you feel. We advise our clients to remain focused on their long-term goals and their overall financial picture, not the temporary discomfort,” explained Morgan Weadock, senior operations analyst at Joel Isaacson & Co.

Sometimes, keeping clients from making impulsive changes requires demonstrating that the plan is working. “We run a wealth analysis which helps our clients focus on their long-term goals. The wealth analysis incorporates inflation and volatile markets,” said Scott Lucia, a wealth advisor at Andrews, Lucia Wealth Management. “We can then show them these factors are already part of the plan, and that sticking with it is the best way to get through these events.”

‘Our job is to help clients stay on track and not make any reactionary actions that could jeopardize their well-being.’

Notes and methodology

For our 17th annual ranking of CPA firms by assets under management, which starts on page 20, we received submissions from more than 200 firms. Such a large number of firms means, among other things, wide diversity in practice structure and in the information submitted. To start, in most cases — but not all — firm names are those of the financial planning subsidiary, not the affiliated CPA firm.

Firms have reported either their overall chief executive, or the leader of the planning practice. For simplicity's sake, we have listed both under "chief executive," though many bear different titles. In cases where a leader was not identified, we identified the leader of the planning practice from the firm's website, where available. In addition, some firms reported staff figures for just the planning practice, some just for the overall CPA firm, and some for both. In cases where we had a choice, we published figures from just the planning subsidiary.

Many firms gave a date for the AUM figure they submitted; these varied widely, from the date of submission to a recent quarter-end, but in no case was it earlier than year-end 2022.

Course corrections

Keeping clients on course doesn't mean you can't trim the sails on occasion, or make adjustments here and there. As some of the Wealth Magnets pointed out, the trick is to know what you can — and cannot — change.

"We are keeping our clients focused on factors that we and they are able to control," said Kyle Stawicki, managing partner of Sax Wealth Advisors. "Our advisor team is hyper-focused on the client's financial plan and making sure that they are still on track to meet their goals, objectives and needs. It is not easy but we really try to help our clients turn off the noise."

Marcum's Wulff shared a few of the areas where the firm has made changes in response to the economic environment: "Over the past year, our investment models have reduced large-cap growth (tech) exposure and added large-cap value holdings, especially those with healthy balance sheets and dividends, which has helped reduce volatility within client accounts. We also added a lot of treasuries paying very attractive yields while providing little risk."

Each client is different, of course, particularly when it comes the stage of their financial lives they may have reached. "We have been revisiting their financial plans and adjusting where needed," said Andrew Paoni, CEO of Sikich Financial. "For younger clients, we have maintained the long-term focus and adjust where necessary. For older clients, we have been reevaluating cash needs to make sure they are still on track."

Constant contact

It's the rare planner who hasn't fielded panicky calls from clients spooked by a sudden market downturn or an unexpected rate hike — and the temptation to send these straight to voicemail can be very strong. The Wealth Magnets, though, resist that temptation.

"While some firms choose to avoid communication during turbulent times, we prefer to have consistent, transparent conversations," said Samantha Geier, marketing and communications manager at SignatureFD. "Our advisors are readily available to have even the toughest of conversations with our clients. Additionally, we immediately communicate with our clients when an unusual occurrence happens. For example, when the SVB and Signature Bank shut-downs occurred, we developed a webpage of FAQs and conducted a live webcast to create a forum where our clients could get their questions answered"

Panicky calls aren't the only (or the best) ways to communicate with clients, and Withum Wealth Management has been exploring a host of them. "This past year, we started running one-hour economic outlook webinars, where we present current market conditions and our view towards the future," explained principal Carmine D'Avino.

To keep clients up to date on a more regular basis and as material news breaks, the firm has also used social media, blog posts, email blasts and short videos, he added: "All these touchpoints allow us to discuss the current environment and potential impacts on clients — often leading to additional one-on-one discussions where we review any cash flow needs and budgetary changes that increased costs may necessitate."

In the end, the best use of all this communication is to keep clients calm, and to remind them that this, too, shall pass.

"We have been telling our clients that we are currently in a mild recession and that we are close to the end of the Fed's cycle of raising rates," explained Erin Jeffries, chief marketing officer at Cain Watters & Associates. "Once the Fed 'hits the pause button' and subsequently begins to lower rates down to their long-term targets, the economy and the market will both begin to gain strength." AT
